

The heavy rains of the past week did serious damage to the cotton crop of Texas.

Five citizens of Cincinnati have contributed $2,500 to the tornado sufferers at Washington, C. H.

Ohio's corn crop this year is estimated at 112,192,744 bushels, the largest grown in that State since 1878.

The Internal Revenue collections at Peoria, Ill., in a single day, recently, amounted to the sum of $118,000.

The Registration Law will go into effect in Cincinnati at the next election. Voters who fail to register before the 30th of this month, will not be allowed to exercise their right of franchise at the coming October contest.

It is rumored at Cincinnati that the Times-Star and one of its afternoon rivals would soon be consolidated. The new concern will send out editions every two hours from 6 a. m. till 6 p. m. This will leave the Evening Telegram as the only opposition afternoon paper.

The contract for the completion of the Cincinnati, Georgetown and Portsmouth Railroad from Hamersville to Georgetown has been let and the work is now in progress. M. E. Ingalls has been elected President; Ralph Peters, Vice President; and Henry Roelker, Secretary and Treasurer of the new company.

The Democratic Primary election at Warren County comes off next Saturday. The race promises to be one of the most exciting events in that section for a long time. An enterprising auctioneer has opened a pool-room, and is selling pools on the various candidates. The office-seekers are numerous, and the favorites are bringing big money.

For the year ending July 1, 1885, there were 217 suits for divorce filed in the courts at Cincinnati. Of these 70 were brought by the husband, 147 by the wife. Adultery was charged in 24, gross neglect in 91, willful absence in 50, extreme cruelty in 22, bigamy in 2 and drunkenness in 28. There were 7 petitions dismissed and 96 decrees granted.

REPORTS from New York say that Bartley Campbell is no longer gay and light-hearted "as he used to be." "Paquita," his latest play, is a failure. As Campbell only made the insignificant sum of $300,000 out of "My Partner," it is high time he was putting on a grave and serious appearance. "Paquita's" failure, you know, might ruin him on the "cold charities of the world," are long.

THERE is a deal of truth in the following taken from the Georgetown Times. The railroads and telegraphs would soon revolutionize the mountain regions of our State. The Times says: "The Evangelists can effect very little toward the reclamation of Eastern Kentucky without the aid of railroads. The locomotive and electric telegraph are great civilizers, and generally go hand in hand with ministers of the gospel."

A SPECIAL to the Louisville Times from Washington, September 12th, says: "It is my impression that Samuel Walton, of Lancaster, Ky., will get a Southern American Consulate. He applied for Buenos Ayres, but Valparaiso would not be bad. Mr. Walton is an excellent young man, one in every way worthy. He is the brother of Colonel Matt. Walton, recently elected Recorder of Lexington. He is a native of Mason County."

The Cigar Makers' International Union is in session at Cincinnati this week. The reports of its officers show that during the past two years there have been one hundred and fifty-two strikes and lock-outs, and that $210,528.88 have been paid out by the Union for the support of its members during these strikes and lock-outs. Within the last six years $500,000 have been paid out in benefits. A resolution tending to a consolidation with the Progressive Union of America was adopted almost unanimously.

The insurance companies doing business in Georgia are considerably excited over a bill lately introduced in the legislature of that State. The substance of the bill is that the companies be compelled to pay the original valuation of property destroyed by fire. In other words, it prohibits the company, in case of a loss, from proving that the property has been over-insured. The insurance men are making every effort to defeat it, and have declared their intention of canceling all their policies now in force, and withdrawing from the State in case it becomes a law. A bill similar to this has, at different times, been introduced in the legislature of several other states, but has always failed to become a law. The principle of the bill may be a good one, but it would be unwise to adopt such a law. It would place the insurance companies at the mercy of the unprincipled rogues of the country.

DEATH OF THOMAS CORWIN.

A Flow of Soul—A Strange Coincidence—A Paralytic Stroke.

[Dr. Russell in Court's Journal.] Mr. Russell quotes a letter written Dec. 19, 1855, relative to the circumstances of Thomas Corwin's death. The document is full of details. It was published anonymously in The Ohio State Journal, but has a very agreeable manner, and I could with the writer have appended his name to it. He says "that never before had it been his lot to see in such startling proximity, life and death, mirth and mourning, fame and frailty, as in the sudden striking down of Corwin."

There was a meeting at Washington of some fifty Ohio politicians, including Wade, Schenck, Chase, Bingham and others of prominence. Corwin was present, the center of interest and admiration. He became, almost in a moment, the one subject of consideration. Some of his hearers were seated, some erect, some leaned forward over the shoulders of their neighbors, but all had eyes and ear upon Corwin. The great man had raised his wand once more—it was the last time that he spoke as he had done for forty years. Those who heard him declared afterward that his youth seemed to return to him. More than one swore that he thought of the fable of the dying swan. There was all the glow of humor, the sparkle of merriment, the glow of enthusiasm, the flash of wit, the charm of anecdote and illustration. And there, prominent before every eye, was that wondrous play of features which few men possessed in such perfection.

The hour ended and the crowd dispersed. Look my seat by his side and by the side of Corwin. Two of those strange coincidences which invest our lives with the mysterious and awful, and which are calculated to feed superstition. After a personal allusion is remarked with much earnestness: "Twenty years ago I saw a man fall in apparently unconscious paralysis when in the midst of excited discourse. He was carried off by his friends in this condition, and his first act of consciousness was to utter the words you have just spoken, 'Corwin had died.'"

In a few minutes afterwards Mr. Corwin was taken with the paralytic seizure from which he died. He had gone into the room to see the crowd again, and he circled him, and the shouts of laughter and clapping of hands welcomed his feet. Every eye and ear was turned to him. He was directed to the chair where he had been playing with skilled fingers upon that mystic harp whose chords are humor, passion, sympathy, and emotion with all the wizard skill and power of his nature. Suddenly his voice sunk to a whisper. He arose from his seat, reached over the chair, and, brought to his friends, cried out for fresh air, and fell forward. He was carried to his room, which served the chamber of death. He who had touched with the scepter of an imperial intellect, states, nations, courts and peoples was now touched, in his turn, touched by the scepter of his superior, and submissively bowed and died.

The Russian Officer.

[Contemporary Review.]

The aristocratic youth of Russia commence their military career in gymnasia schools, where they receive a liberal education at the age of 10. Religion, languages, and mathematics form part of the course, which lasts for seven years; but drill, fencing, gymnastics and swimming are subjects which considerable prominence is given, and each school has a uniform in which the scholars invariably appear. At the end of the course they are radically inspected, and only those who are physically fit are permitted to be examined for admission; those who are rejected may be appointed to different offices under government.

The corps d'élite are held out as inducements to those who pass the highest standard of examination. There are eighteen or twenty of these at present in the different portions of the empire. They feed the eight cadet schools which provide the higher class of officers. Of these the imperial guard, the corps of aristocratic, and the corps of the officers for the guard. The remainder are at St. Petersburg, by the command of the Alexander corps at Moscow, and the Finland cadets corps at Helsinki, the latter being exclusively for the duty of the Finns. The Michael artillery and Nicholas engineer corps schools furnish, as their titles imply, the higher class of artillery and engineer officers.

The gymnasia, of which there are eight, receive boys of any class, 10 years of age, and a small percentage of whom win the army direct as non-commissioned officers; the remainder supply the Junker schools, after a seven years' course. The Junker schools provide the body of officers. The course lasts for two years, and only those cadets who obtain a certain figure of merit are appointed to commissions. The cadets, in addition to theoretical instruction, have a most practical course of study in shooting and outpost duty; they also go into camp for four months in the year, and take part in all drills and exercises. Batteries, squadrons, and battalions are formed, all named by cadets. These schools are in the different military districts and under the staff of those districts, and the instructors are taken from the best officers in the district.

A New One on Mark Twain.

[Kansas City Times.]

The Rev. J. Hyatt Smith knows more stories about more people than ten average citizens. Among them he relates this: "When I was living with my brother in Buffalo Mark Twain occupied a cottage across the street. We didn't see very much of him, but one morning, as we were enjoying our cigars on the veranda after breakfast, 'come in,' said Mark, 'and slip on your slippers and look over to us. He stood at the door, smoking for a minute, as if making up his mind about something, and at last opened his eyes and came lounging across the street. There was no smoke, no rocking chair on the veranda, and when my brother offered it to him he dropped it into it with a sigh of relief. He smoked for a few moments and said: 'Nice morning.' 'Yes, very pleasant.' 'Shouldn't wonder if we had rain by and by.' 'Wall, we could stand a little.' 'This is a nice house, have you here?' 'Yes, veritable like it.' 'How's your family?' 'Quite well—and yours?' 'O, we're all comfortable.'"

There was another impressive silence, and finally Mark Twain crossed his legs, blew a puff of smoke into his pipe, and he lay back and remarked: "I suppose you're a little tired, aren't you?"

surprised to see me over here so early. Fact is, I haven't been so neighborly, perhaps, as I ought to be. We must meet that state of things. But this morning I came over because I thought you might be interested in knowing that your roof is on fire. It struck me that it would be a good idea if— But at the mention of fire the whole family dusted up stairs, trailing language all the way up. When we had put the fire out and had returned to a normal state, Mark wasn't there.

THE FIDDLE IN SOCIETY.

A New Hobby Which the Young Ladies of Philadelphia Have Taken Up. [Philadelphia Letter.]

The young ladies of Philadelphia's fashionable society have taken up a new hobby—the fiddle. It has grown to be almost as great a rage as the skating rink in less fashionable sets. I understand that the wrinkles were brought from Boston by one of our girls, who attended a wedding there. All the others have become infected. Classes for the "study of the violin," as one musical maiden put it exist in almost every block.

The outfit for instruments is often extravagant. One young lady now avers that she declares a Stradivarius 150 years old. She has had it, for some extraordinary reason, of safety and protection. Now she has quite ruined it. Still, that doesn't matter since she has made the instrument an object of adoration. Another young lady has a fiddle that she declares was a favorite one of Paganini's. If that is true Paganini's ear must have been formed on a different basis from that of people who make no pretension to musical genius. But then, it is possible that the violin's extraordinary tone may be due in some degree to the fact that it is all tied up in old gold ribbons. The young lady's teacher warned her that the tight bands would impair the quality of the tones. The young woman was an angel; she thought the fiddle didn't seem much to her mind, and in any event she was determined to retain the ribbons, because they suited her complexion. This is art sacrificed to vanity.

I asked an old French musician, who is teaching the fiddle to some young ladies, what he thought of their playing. "Well," said he, "to perform well on the violin means that you have given it to years and years of study and practice. Now, I can't say anything about my dear young ladies that would imply that they had given years to anything?"

On One of the Back Rows.

[San Francisco Chronicle.]

I sat on one of the back rows at one of the last musical assemblies at Cincinnati, Ohio. I sat on one that was not much up listening. Behind me a very well-known lawyer and a friend of mine, who had brought to me even Mrs. Rivington came out to play piano solo. It was a long one, but we could not hear. The lady behind me got up and looked at the stage after a long wait. "Oh, my! She's a-goin' it, yet."

PILGRIM FATHERS.
CURIOSITIES CONTAINED IN THE MUSEUM AT PLYMOUTH, MASS.
Portraits of Old Colonists and Their Successors—Miles Standish's Platter,
Pot and Sword—Chairs and Cradles—Manuscripts.

None of the houses in Plymouth have any particular antiquity. There is an old tavern called the Window house, which was for a good while a house, but it only runs back to the close of the revolution. There were a good many Dutch ovens originally in Plymouth, built in imitation of what the pilgrims had seen in Holland. One of the little houses down in the hollow of the town is said to have been partly built in 1603. There are about six houses which go back to the close of the seventeenth century, and none of them have anything antique to the eye.

When you enter the museum, however, you have a genuine feast, though not a very long one, of old English antiquities. This building makes a good impression; originally put up in 1824, a rich Baltimorean named Silliman, who had been born in Boston, gave $15,000 to have it made over fire-proof. The building is now a sort of doric temple, with six columns in front and steps to its entire width; and in the pediment above is an effective wood engraving of a man in a boat, with a sword and a shield, and a man stepping out of a boat, and being received by an Indian, while another person in the boat holds the oars. To the right of the door is the office where you pay 25 cents and record your name. This room and a similar one opposite the main hall within are filled with furniture and other curiosities, and down stairs are many others.

The portraits of the old Pilgrim chaps and their successors down to the present time are quite interesting. Nearly all the pictures and engravings concerning the Pilgrims have been framed, from Burnet's and Lacy down to Bouton. You see the cloak of John Hancock, made in 1700; the royal arms in the old court house which had a banishment to Nova Scotia during the Revolution; pictures of Plymouth in 1827; a commission by Cromwell to Edward Winslow of 1634, which was the well's autograph stolen from it; John Trumbull's likeness, by him; Dr. Tucke's portrait, of the Revolution, a man who wrote an interesting book; pictures of several of the Winslows, one of them an original emigrant, who was buried at sea in 1635; an original picture of Daniel Webster; many of the earliest books used by the Pilgrims, one published by them in Leyden in 1618, before they sailed, called a Confutation of Rhemistis, translations, glosses and annotations of the New Testament. This is a great curiosity.

Notable among the curiosities is the patent issued by the president and council for New England in 1621. It is said to be the oldest state paper in the United States, and was brought out here by a vessel called the Good Fortune the year after the Pilgrims arrived. There are also pictures of the houses in England where the Bradford family came from. There is an engraving of a cradle brought out in 1623. You see a fragment of a Rose Standish's quilt, embroidery work of Miles Standish's, dagger, brick and pipestem from the ruins of Standish's house. Standish's old pewter platter, iron pot and sword; this sword has the original hilt upon it; the blade has on it figures of the sun, moon and stars. This sword is said to have been of Persian manufacture and the figures on it of Persian mythology. You see among the relics of Standish's house the wrought-iron nails he put it up with.

There is a Dutch Bible as old as the Pilgrims, a pair of spectacles worn by one of the passengers in the Mayflower, an instrument used by the Pilgrims, a fragment of a Rose Standish's quilt, embroidery work of Miles Standish's, dagger, brick and pipestem from the ruins of Standish's house. Standish's old pewter platter, iron pot and sword; this sword has the original hilt upon it; the blade has on it figures of the sun, moon and stars. At the Grosvenor Exhibition.
[London Life.]
Mrs. Langtry was the observed of all observers at the Grosvenor gallery private view Saturday last. No pictures in the place attracted half the attention that she did. She was quietly but stylishly dressed in dark seal-green velvet and rich Ottoman silk. In her bonnet, which was of black jet bordered with gold lace, she wore a large bow of the new green watered ribbon. Lady Monkton was also much talked of. Her gown was of bright-red Osman broads. Her bonnet was of plush, the same color. The dress suited her to perfection, and did duty, in the way of color, for a uniform.
